The Battle of Berlin raged from 1942 until March 1944, when Bomber Harris conceded that his area bombing strategy, the only strategy left open to him at the time, just was not working. Where the strategy had succeeded in the Battle of the Ruhr and against Hamburg, Berlin posed too great a challenge not least because of the limited range of our own fighter support, the imprecision of the much longer range night operations to Berlin and the German air defences protecting their capital.

The primary task of Coastal Command was to protect convoys from the German Kriegsmarine's U-boat force. It also protected Allied shipping from the aerial threat posed by the Luftwaffe.

The main operations of Coastal Command were defensive, defending supplies lines in the various theatres of war, most notably the battle of the Atlantic. A limited number of detachments served in the Mediterranean, Middle East and African theatres under the Command from 1941, operating from a headquarters in Gibraltar. Coastal Command squadrons operated from bases in the UK, Iceland, Gibraltar, the Soviet Union, West Africa and North Africa.

Coastal Command also served in an offensive capacity. By 1943 Coastal Command finally received the recognition it needed and its operations proved decisive in the victory over the U-boats.

Prior to the establishment of the Desert Air Force (DAF), several RAF formations operated in North Africa. On 3 September 1939, RAF Middle East Command—under Air Chief Marshal Sir William Mitchell, Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief Middle East - comprised four separate groups: Egypt (designated Middle East), RAF Iraq, Mediterranean at Malta, and RAF Aden (8, 203, and 94 Squadrons). Mitchell handed over to Air Vice Marshal Sir Arthur Longmore (RAF College Commandant 1929-1933) in early May 1940. When Italy declared war in June 1940, Longmore had just 29 squadrons numbering less than 300 aircraft in the four groups detailed above.

The DAF, also known chronologically as Air Headquarters Western Desert, Air Headquarters Libya, the Western Desert Air Force, and the First Tactical Air Force (1TAF), was an Allied tactical air force created from No. 204 Group RAF under RAF Middle East Command in North Africa in 1941, to provide close air support to the British Eighth Army against Axis forces. Throughout World War II, the DAF was made up of squadrons from the RAF, the South African Air Force (SAAF), the Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF), the United States Army Air Forces (USAAF) and other Allied air forces.

In October 1941, the Western DAF had 16 squadrons of aircraft (nine fighter, six medium bomber and one tactical reconnaissance) and fielded approximately 1,000 combat aircraft by late 1941. By the time of the Second Battle of El Alamein, the DAF fielded 29 squadrons (including nine South African and three USAAF units) flying Boston, Baltimore and Mitchell medium bombers; Hurricane, Kittyhawk, Tomahawk, Warhawk and Spitfire fighters and fighter-bombers. There were over 1,500 combat aircraft, more than double the number of aircraft the Axis could field.
